Student Eligibility

You Could Qualify for SNAP if you:

- Work 80 hours/month
- Participate in Work-Study
- Are a parent or caregiver
- Receive TANF benefits
- Have a disability that makes working challenging
- Participate in a workforce development program

Students (18-49) attending at least half-time may be eligible for SNAP by meeting income guidelines and additional criteria.

Students attending less than half-time and those age 50+ do not need to meet additional student criteria (only income).

Other Important Factors

- If your meal plan pays for more than half of your meals per week, then you are not eligible for SNAP.
- If you're under the age of 22 and living with your parents or guardians, you must apply for SNAP as part of their household.
- If you are on break from school, you still must meet the student criteria that make you eligible for SNAP (for example, if you qualify by working an average of 80 hours per month, you need to keep doing that over summer break to remain eligible for SNAP).
- If you are receiving benefits through the VA or private scholarships, these count as income. Other financial aid, including Pell grants, Perkins loans, and work-study, is not counted as income for SNAP.
